Are your Cheques still in the Mail? Don't let a Postal Disruption Interrupt your Business

Did you know that Canada Post and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers have been in contract negotiations since late 2015 to reach a new agreement? Already some of Canada Post's biggest customers, including the federal government, were told to make contingency plans ahead of a possible contract dispute with workers. According to an article in the Winnipeg Free Press on June 28, "a Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) media release noted that interruptions could start Saturday if talks with Canada Post were to break down completely."

With a possible postal disruption starting as early as July 2, how is your business going to receive your payments? What about sending payments to your suppliers or time sensitive remittances? Telpay can help.

Telpay for Business software enables companies of any size to send and receive electronic payments. By sending payments (payroll, bill payments, USD payments and international payments) and receiving payments electronically, companies do not need to rely on the post office ever again to send and receive payments.

Are you ready for a possible postal disruption? With Telpay, your business will never have to worry about cheques, envelopes, postage or any looming postal strikes. With Telpay for Business, it is always business as usual.
